Footie fans on target to spend £322m at Euro 2016

British football fans will spend a ball-istic £322million in France during the Euros, according to the latest research from Halifax.

If the rumours of 500,000 England, Wales and Northern Ireland<sup>1</sup> fans descending on France at some point during the month-long tournament are to be believed, they could be netting a whopping £321.8million boost to the host country.

This is enough to score superstar players Gareth Bale (£85m), Cristiano Ronaldo (£80m), Kevin de Breyune (£54m), Raheem Sterling (£49m) and Mesut Ozil (£42.1m) and still have loose change, or even buy Premier League Champions Leicester City 10 times over. This is also almost half the amount foreign fans visiting Britain<sup>2</sup> to watch a football match spent in 2014 or 10 per cent<sup>3</sup> of the total annual spend by British tourists in France.

According to Halifax, those estimated 250,000 supporters with a ticket for a game will each spend approximately £650 on average, when taking into consideration the cost of travel, accommodation (a two-night stay), food, drink and other costs.

Just looking to soak up the atmosphere at a nearby bar or official fan zones will set football fans back in excess of £460 each, or even more if they manage to buy a ticket once they've arrived in the host nation.

PRESS RELEASE

11/06/2016

Darren Tong, Head of Halifax Current Accounts said: “The Euros are undoubtedly one of the biggest tournaments in the football calendar, and being so close to home this year, it’s no surprise that we can expect around half a million fans to make the short hop across the channel.

“For those making the pilgrimage, setting a daily allowance and planning how you intend to pay for items while you are there are key tactics to keep on top of the cash. It’s likely that fans will pay a premium for food, drink and souvenirs in and around the stadiums, so if you’re not on a European Championship player’s earnings, then it’s worth thinking of the easiest ways to save you and your team a bit of cash.”
